DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 112

The following is a quotation of the second paragraph of 35 U.S.C. 112:

The specification shall conclude with one or more claims particularly pointing out and distinctly claiming the subject matter which the applicant regards as his invention.

Claims rejected as failing to define the invention in the manner required by 35 U.S.C. 112, second paragraph.

The claim(s) are narrative in form and replete with indefinite and functional or operational language. The structure which goes to make up the device must be clearly and positively specified. The structure must be organized and correlated in such a manner as to present a complete operative device. The claim(s) must be in one sentence form only. Note the format of the claims in the patent(s) cited.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 101

35 U.S.C. 101 reads as follows:

Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor, subject to the conditions and requirements of this title.

Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 101 because the claimed invention is directed to non-statutory subject matter. While processes are one of the four categories of patentable subject matter listed above, it does not follow that all processes are necessarily patentable.

The test for patentability is whether a process has a useful, tangible and concrete result. Natural phenomena, mathematical principles and other abstract ideas are not patentable. Patentable subject matter must be in the useful, or technological arts. That is, the invention must in some way involve the advancement of technology. The present invention is directed to a keyboarding process, where numbers are assigned to keys. This assignment, in and of itself, does not amount to patentable subject matter. Rather, the invention amounts to the manipulation of abstract ideas, where a user might visualize in the mind's eye certain concepts while keyboarding. The method does not involve a physical transformation of matter from one state to another, nor does it involve the use of technology. While the method is arguably useful in teaching choral keyboarding, there is no concrete or tangible result. As a result, the claim is rejected under 35 USC 101 .

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claim 1 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Bermudez. As understood, the claim is directed to a method of assigning numbers to keys in a keyboarding method. Bermudez discloses a method of keyboarding where numbers are assigned to keys, and corresponding numerical indicia are located on the keys and on sheet music. While the precise numbering method of claim 1 is not disclosed by Bermudez, such numbering is an obvious variation on the disclosure of Bermudez.

Conclusion

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Shimzu, Hoffman, Bui, Ney, Hughey, Siegel and Guilford disclose various keyboarding methods comprising the assignment of various types of indicia to keys.
